THE OREGON PRIMARIES.

The presidential primary results in Oregon yesterday bring up an interesting situation. In Oregon alone of all the states can the voters openly and officially show their preference for Hughes. Owing to Hughes' position upon the supreme bench he has declined to permit his name to be used on any ballot as a candidate. But under the Oregon law the voters may indicate their preference with or without the consent of the candidate. Supporters of Hughes in Oregon insisted on keeping his name on the ballot despite his expressed wishes.

Oregon has generally gone Republican but it is a state of independent folk and in 1912 went Democratic for the second time in its history.

TO REACH THE ELECTORATE.

Norman Watkins, a businessman with plenty of experience in politics, delivered an address before the Rotary Club this week which is published on Page 17 today. It makes interesting reading.

It sums up as follows:

"The one point that I have tried to present is that while the businessman has the brains and the ambition to improve governmental conditions he is helpless because he does not get his views before the masses and thus work up public sentiment."

Mr. Watkins does not blame the electorate—he puts the blame where it belongs—on the businessmen who expect they can get good government by spending a little time and money once in two years to elect a ticket which is usually merely the best of a mediocre lot.

The answer to the problem Mr. Watkins emphasizes is publicity—clean, straight-out, above-board, consistent, forceful, intelligent publicity. Publicity that hammers the truths home day after day. Publicity that sets out the facts day after day. Publicity that carries the punch day after day.

The kind of publicity that, in national politics, is exemplified by four pages of paid political advertising in the Saturday Evening Post. That's the businesslike way, the efficient way, the progressive way, the twentieth-century way.

Mr. Watkins talks about the vast sum of money required to conduct a campaign of education. If one-tenth of the campaign funds businessmen here have dug up every two years were spent in straightforward paid publicity instead of in "retaining the services" of runners, precinct hangers-on and professional politicians—if one-tenth had been put into proper publicity, the businessmen would be infinitely nearer the mass of electorate than they are today.

INFORMATION FIRST.

The passing of Harper's Weekly is one more of many proofs that what American readers of today demand first in their journalism is information. Opinion comes second.

The great newspapers of a generation ago were renowned for their editorial utterances. When men like Horace Greeley and Henry J. Raymond spoke, a nation listened. Yet if a critical reader dissects their editorials in the light of present-day education, then inconsistencies, prejudices and even woeful ignorances are obvious. But in those days popular education in science, international politics, law and diplomacy, and such subjects was scanty. Lacking information, readers of the current magazines accepted opinions and adopted them for their own, and public sentiment was moulded much less on the clear understanding of facts than it is today.

Now the daily newspaper and the weekly and monthly magazine are created out of world-news and views. All over the United States the "little red schoolhouse" has taught men and women to do their own thinking. They take the newspaper of today primarily for facts, and are ready and able to make up their minds on the basis of a careful reading, a discriminating consideration, of the facts.

When Schurz, Curtis and their confreres were at the helm of American journalism, when Nast was at his height of power, Harper's Weekly was a great journal. Yet today not only this journal is dead but every serious political journal in the United States is either dead, dying or changing its manner of appeal. Many of the weeklies are scarcely serious. Leslie's Weekly caters to public interest by up-to-date illustrations and a frank subordination of political opinion to business exigencies. The Outlook, once a religious weekly, is rapidly becoming a chronicle of news events, with special features of timely interest. Collier's is going in strong for fiction. All aim to feature world news.

The point is that personal journalism is passing and the saner, sounder, more constructive journalism is developing which aims first to present news fairly and comprehensively and secondly to interpret that news.

America's great newspapers, such as the New York Times and World, the Chicago Tribune, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, have editorial writers as able as and far better informed than any of the giants of the old days. Yet these newspapers are called great in the main because they are great in the gathering and publication of the news.

The average American can be trusted to form a pretty sane opinion if the news is fairly presented to him.

"A LITTLE BRIEF AUTHORITY."

Of course Shakespeare is a "dead one," and they're celebrating his tercentenary, but what he wrote three hundred years ago applies in a good many cases today. One of his immortal characterizations is the following:

But man, proud man, Drest in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he's most assured, His glassy essence, like an angry ape, Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven as make the angels weep.

This goes for other places than Honolulu, too!

AMERICAN EFFICIENCY.

(From Daily Financial America.)

We hear so much about German efficiency that we are apt to forget American efficiency. Let it not be forgotten that the first essential of efficiency is the conception and initiation of practical and constructive ideas. In this regard the United States has led and still leads the world. Indeed, not a few of the inventions which have made warfare so "efficient" have sprung from American minds, just as inventions which have done most in stimulating agricultural and manufacturing progress have come from this side of the Atlantic. The Germans have excelled in applying important ideas and important inventions to the various departments of economic activity. The American bent is to initiate; it does not always excel in the painstaking work which must follow the launching of a great idea. Yet there are scores of examples ready to hand in this country of a surpassing efficiency not only of conception and initiation but of systematic achievement as well. The Bell telephone system, Standard Oil, United States Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Harvester, Singer Sewing Machine, National Cash Register, Underwood and Remington typewriter companies, Woolworth stores, car and locomotive builders, Bush Terminal Co., etc.

A reader of the Star-Bulletin—a warm-hearted Irish-American—says that an editorial of yesterday telling of funds being sent to Ireland from the U. S. in secret was a mistake—that the funds were openly acknowledged in Irish papers. This is partially correct, but since the Sinn Fein uprising the facts have come out in New York about large amounts of money sent quietly to Ireland and used specifically for the purposes of the rebellion. Meanwhile, of course, former sons and daughters of the Emerald Isle and thousands of American sympathizers have contributed regularly and openly to various Irish funds.

None of the European nations mention William Jennings Bryan as the possible peace arbitrator. While President Wilson, the Pope and King Alfonso of Spain have figured in the rumors, W. J. B. is cruelly overlooked.

Now that Mr. Hearst's cowboys at Boca Grandes have killed a few Mexican bandits, perhaps the thirst of the Hearst press for Mexican blood will be partially satiated.

We note occasionally where the Russians overpower the Austrians; but, somehow, the world is not so intensely interested in the Austrians.—Portland, Ore., Telegram.

Bryan is threatening to lead a bolt from the Democratic party. Every bolt has its nut.—Cambridge, Minn., North Star.

Evidently that is going to be a nice little delegation the Democratic machine in Hawaii will send to St. Louis.

The Colonel can also give Mr. Henry Ford some lessons in political self-starting.

VISITING WOMEN EXECUTIVES TO LECTURE MONDAY

Pan-Pacific Exposition Interesting Subject for Talks at Y. W. C. A.

At the Young Women's Christian Association next Monday evening, the Pan-Pacific Exposition will be the subject of an illustrated lecture. This will be the first educational lecture given by the Association since the opening of the new building last January, the second occasion for the use of the excellent reflectoscope it recently acquired, and the only opportunity for the general public to hear Miss Louise Underwood and Miss Lillian Jones, both of whom are making only short visits to Honolulu.
Miss Louise Underwood is qualified by six months' experience as a guide to talk upon the general plan and phases of special interest at the Exposition. It is this part of the lecture which will be illustrated.
Miss Lillian Jones is the executive secretary for the Pacific Coast field of the Young Women's Christian Association, which has its headquarters in San Francisco. Through her position she acquired an intimate knowledge of the work of the Association at the Fair, and it is upon this subject that she will speak. This work was remarkable not only because of the efficient way in which it met the needs of the women visitors through its lunch room, rest room, information bureau, day nursery and all the rest, but also because of the comprehensive way in which it met the needs of the women employed on the grounds through its employment agency, its commercial classes, its parties, loan fund and most of all the club house on the Zene.
The lecture is free to all.

E. W. CHRISTMAS IS RECOVERING

E. W. Christmas, R. B. A., the English artist who went to Maui last month and who while out in the mountains back of Lahaina met with an accident, is rapidly recovering.
Mr. Christmas and George Freeland had worked their way about 20 miles up into the mountains. Freeland hunting and Christmas painting, when the latter suddenly collapsed, became unconscious. Freeland, seeing that his companion was in a serious condition, picked him up and carried him on his back down the mountain until he struck the county road, where they were fortunate enough to meet Dave Fleming with an auto, into which they put Christmas and rushed him off to the hospital, where after a consultation of three doctors his life was despaired of. However, he has come through and is now on the road to recovery, largely due to the care and attention of his new-found friends in a time of need.
Maui must look good to Christmas in more ways than one.

GLOWING TRIBUTE PAID JUDGE DOLE BY S. C. HUBER, NEW U. S. ATTORNEY

Iowan, in Address in Federal Court, Praises Work of Aged Jurist

A glowing tribute to the work of Hon. Sanford B. Dole was paid by Seta Cormany Huber, new U. S. attorney for Hawaii, in an address which he delivered in federal court following his qualification last Monday morning.

Mr. Huber said: "If the court please, members of the bar and friends: I assure you that my qualification could not have occurred under any more happy and I trust auspicious circumstances than the setting which we have here this morning—an occasion which is dignified by the elevation of Judge Vaughan and which is honored by this large presence as a well-earned tribute of respect to the retiring justice, Judge Dole.

"As I look about this morning, I observe no face that I have greeted until my arrival here on Saturday evening, and I will greet most of the faces present for the first time, and yet I realize that we are not the strangers that we are, as I indicated a moment ago—friends. Drawn together in that relationship from the fact that we have a bond of common interest, perhaps only the common interest of citizens of the same country, perhaps the closer bond of interest of being officers of this court engaged in the furtherance of its high aims. I trust that our future relations may be mutually both helpful and agreeable.

"I realize something of the unpopular and unpleasant position which the duties of the office which I assume brings and which perhaps well elicits the sympathy tendered by Judge Quarles, but we must never forget that however unpleasant the duty may be there is no excuse for shirking it and that whether we are on the one side of the trial table or the other our ends are common in determining as suggested by a speaker who preceded simply the right. To Judge Vaughan I wish to say that I sincerely trust your experience on the bench may be agreeable.

may be pleasant and that the services rendered may be most valuable, and I cannot sit down on this occasion without saying that in some regards I consider it most fortunate that I should be present at this time when this tribute of respect is paid to Judge Dole.

"The name of Judge Dole came to me at the same time that I first heard the name of this territory, for at the time that events were so rapidly evolving in the islands, the history then in making became known throughout our country and with it, I say, was linked the name of Judge Dole, and I think I am safe in saying that there is not a school child in the United States who has studied—has arrived at the age where he is studying our country's history that he does not connect the name of Judge Dole in the manner in which it has found a permanent place in my mind.

"I have been interested by the exercises here this morning because we are perhaps unconsciously witnessing one of the most beautiful scenes of life, for after all, our success in life is measured solely by the service, the unselfish service we are able to give to our fellows, and what in life is more beautiful than to grow old in years with that development of spirit, with that development of mind which makes a constantly increasing service possible, and then retire in latter life feeling that you have that well-earned respect of all your fellows and all your associates. I take it that no legacy that can be left to those most dear can equal the legacy of honors so earned.

"And this occasion I believe will prove an inspiration and help to all who are here this morning, because it will give us renewed courage and renewed determination for a better life in order that we may emulate the real guest of honor on this occasion."
